

Jessica Stollings - Bio

Jessica Stollings is a national speaker, author, and the president of ReGenerations- a company on a mission to connect generations to transform relationships, the workplace and world. Leaders across the country have built solutions around her research and ideas.

Jessica's generational diversity training - in partnership with Electric Utility Board (EPB) of Chattanooga, TN - was recently voted one of the top 120 in the world via Training Magazine.

Jessica's passion for intergenerational collaboration sparked through her personal life journey and through her leadership roles in talent development and corporate communications for Contura Energy- a former Fortune 500 company- where she developed the company's first corporate university.

Jessica also served as a nationally -syndicated news reporter and producer for a Focus on the Family radio show, which was heard by more than 2-million listeners each week.

Jessica graduated from King University with degrees in English and Communication. She captained the volleyball team as an academic all-American, and was honored among professional and Olympic athletes.

Jessica is a graduate of Leadership Tennessee Class V and resides in Franklin, Tennessee. To learn more, visit re-generations.org.